Preface

It has been considered advisable to publish a brief history of the Somerset Club from its organization to the present time, a period of sixty years, that in this way the memory of the names and lives of many distinguished gentlemen of Boston who played an important part in making our city what it was in a former generation, and who made this Club one of the most distinguished social associations of our country, shall be held in due honor by their successors, and that there shall be preserved the roll not only of our predecessors but of all those also with whom we have been associated.

The preparation of this volume has been entrusted to a special committee by the government of the Club.

The Club is greatly indebted to Mrs. Charles W. Amory, Dr. J. Collins Warren, Dr. Henry F. Sears and Mr. Charles F. Read of the Bostonian Society for valuable information concerning the houses of the Club.

History of the Somerset Club

In 1846 there existed an association of gentlemen (called at first the Travellers, later the Tremont Club), which occupied chambers in Tremont Street described as opposite the old Boston Museum, a playhouse. It possessed no restaurant, but refreshments were brought in from without as wanted. It consisted of forty-one members.

These gentlemen, whose names are given below, adopted, September 12, 1851, the name at first of Beacon Club, soon changed to Somerset Club, and purchased for their new home the stone building on the eastern corner of Somerset and Beacon streets. This edifice, with the adjoining Gardner house, was built in 1816 by Mr. David Hinckley, and was called the finest house in Boston at that time. Its site had been previously occupied by the ancient "Stone house" of Rev. James Allen of the First Church, who owned "a far larger part of the territory of Boston than was ever owned by any other individual." The Hinckley house was inherited and occupied by his daughter, who married W. G. Hodgkinson, Esq. It was purchased of her in 1831 by Hon. Benjamin W. Crowninshield, who removed at that time from Salem. The interior, filled with beautiful furniture, paintings, and statuary, is well described by his daughter, Mrs. J. Mason Warren, in her interesting Reminiscences privately published a few years ago.

"Gleaner" (Nathaniel I. Bowditch) thus alludes to the Club house in one of his interesting communications in the Boston Transcript, 1855, as "so well known to 'Young America' for its elegant appointments, or, as devoted wives sitting at home might prefer to call them, its seductive attractions."

After Mr. Crowninshield's death in 1851 the house was purchased by this Club and opened to members April 1, 1852. During its occupancy a ladies' restaurant was opened in connection with the Club, probably the first of its kind in the country. Here follows a copy of the call for the meeting of organization: —

BOSTON, March 20th, 1852.

SIR:

The Subscribers to the Club, at the corner of Beacon and Somerset Streets, are requested to meet in their Club House, on Friday, the 26th inst., at 7 o'clock P.M., to receive the report of their Committee; to establish a Constitution and By-Laws, and transact such other business as may come before the meeting, preparatory to occupancy.

JOHN D. BATES,
For the Executive Committee.

P.S. The Club House will be open to the families of members and their friends, on Wednesday the 24th inst., during the day and evening.

The property was held under an instrument in the form of an indenture, which begins as follows: "Whereas by an indenture made on the Seventeenth of April in the year of our Lord 1852 between Francis B. Crowninshield, Esq., Samuel Hooper, Esq., and James Davis, the younger, merchant, all of the city of Boston, on the one part, and Francis Bassett, Frederick H. Bradlee and David Sears, Jr., all of said Boston, Esquires, who executed the same on behalf of the members of the 'Somerset Club,'" etc. Messrs. Crowninshield, Hooper and Davis became trustees, under whom the property was held for the benefit of the shareholders; but in 1855, 240 six per cent bonds, of $250 each, to the amount of sixty thousand dollars, were issued, subject to a sinking fund of $1000 per annum, and shares to this amount were retired.

After twenty years, in 1871, the Club again felt it necessary to obtain more capacious quarters, and purchased the Sears Mansion, 42 and 43 Beacon Street, at a cost of $210,000, to which it removed the following year. The old Club house was then sold to the Congregational Association, and was known as the Congregational Building. In 1896 it was purchased by Houghton and Dutton, who in 1904 took the structure down, and erected on its site the western corner part of their present stores.

The land upon which the Sears Mansion was erected was a part of the eleven acres previously owned by John Singleton Copley, the celebrated artist, and originally belonged to Blackstone.

Copley speaks of it as his farm on Beacon Hill. There he painted many of his famous portraits. All that we know of the house is that it was painted yellow, and that near it was that of "Master Vinal" the schoolteacher, where the Otis house, now the residence of W. Austin Wadsworth, Esq., stands.

In 1774 Copley left Boston, went to Europe, and did not return. The British forces erected fortifications upon his lands. In his absence his house was sold without his knowledge. In 1796 he sent his son, later Lord Lyndhurst, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, to Boston to recover his property. The suit was compromised by Messrs. Otis and Mason on payment of four thousand guineas. The date of the demolition of the Copley house has not been ascertained.

Upon this Copley lot Mr. Sears built his handsome stone house on the line of Beacon Street, and inserted a tablet with the following inscription: "Mansion House, erected by David Sears in the year one thousand eight hundred and nineteen — A. Parris, architect." The ornamental marble tablets upon the front were carved by Solomon Willard, who was the architect of Bunker Hill Monument.

The original Sears house had but one bow, with windows from the basement to the roof on each side of it. The entrance was upon its eastern side through a courtyard leading to a stable in the rear. There were trees in this yard, as well as in that on the western side of the house, and another story was added. Behind the old house (Copley's) stood a barn, which was converted into a temporary hospital for the wounded British officers after the battle of Bunker Hill. When Mr. Sears was digging the foundations of his house the workmen came, at a depth of several feet under the surface, to a gigantic moccasined foot, perhaps 2½ feet long, broken off at the ankle, and carved from a kind of limestone not found in this vicinity, which he presented to the Boston Athenæum, where it seems to have been lost sight of.

"Even Mr. Copley would admit that the houses of Messrs. Sears, Parker and Appleton have more than made good the two domiciles which are delineated in all the dignity of yellow paint on the original plan of the Mt. Vernon purchase. Except the old powder house we have seen that only these two houses (Copley's and Master Vinal's) appear on a plan of an Estate containing a million of square feet, upon which now stand probably five hundred houses." Gleaner, in 1855 ; vide 5th Report of Record Commissioners.

Later the building was extended westward by the erection of an additional bow upon land adjoining belonging to the Harrison Gray Otis estate. (The house now standing between the Club and the Otis Mansion, occupied by Mr. Richard C. Dixey, was built in 1823 by Mr. Otis, in his garden, for his daughter, Mrs. Ritchie.) In 1853 another house was built by Mr. Sears covering the courtyard of the mansion to the eastward, thus closing access to the stable. The main entrance was then changed to its present position facing Beacon Street.

Before occupation by the Club certain additions were made to the house in the rear under the direction of Messrs. Snell and Gregerson, architects. The old stable was razed, and a large and stately dining-room was erected as an L, with a billiard hall above it. At right angles to it a kitchen was built, and in the story over it was constructed a bowling alley. Enclosed by these structures a large and pleasant court was constructed, some sixty feet square. Sodded and surrounded by vines, shrubs and flowers, it forms a delightful outside lounging place in summer. Many changes were made within the old edifice to fit it for the purposes of a club house. In the process of reconstruction a secret chamber in the attic was discovered, filled with old Madeira wine, stored there at an unknown period and apparently forgotten by the former owner. Several dining-rooms for private entertainments were included in the alterations. In one of them, a large and beautiful room, many college class dinners and notable banquets have been served. Among its adornments may be mentioned an immense Chinese punch-bowl, the gift of Mrs. Henry P. Sturgis, and the handsome dinner service, twenty-one pieces of Sheffield plate, which was brought to Philadelphia from Paris by Richard Rush, our Minister to France, 1847–1849. He purchased it from an old French family which was in possession of it for fifty years. Mr. Rush had his coat of arms engraved upon it. He and Webster, it has been said, were intimate friends, and the former, knowing Webster coveted it, offered to sell it to him. Some of Webster's friends, knowing this, bought it and presented it to him, and had his name inscribed upon the pieces. After Webster's death, October 24, 1852, the "Marshfield Club," consisting of some twelve members of the Somerset Club, purchased a large part of the service and presented it to the Club.

A ladies' restaurant was also constructed, with a separate entrance, on the lower floor of the western bow. In 1872, when the Club first occupied their new premises, all supplies (such as coal, ice, provisions) and ashes, were carried through a passage from the rear of No. 43 Beacon to Spruce Street. Complaint having been made to the Supreme Court that although the estate No. 43 owned a right of way to Spruce Street, estate No. 42 had no such right, therefore the Supreme Court granted an injunction against its further use by No. 42. It thus became necessary to build a tunnel or subway under the house from Beacon Street to the rear of the Club, otherwise everything must have been carried through the front doors.

During his occupancy of the mansion many distinguished men were entertained in it by Mr. Sears, among others Daniel Webster, Rufus Choate, Prescott, Everett, Motley, and often, before the Civil War, gentlemen from the South.

In 1896 the adjoining house, 41 Beacon Street, formerly occupied by William Amory, Esq., was purchased by the Club and annexed. Its site was once the courtyard of the Sears estate.

At the opening of the Club house, April 30, 1872, a reception was given to ladies, and its rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers.

During the "Peace Jubilee" in 1872, a notable concert was given in the courtyard by the band of the English Grenadier Guards under the leadership of the well-known Dan Godfrey.

The front of the building was at one time covered by the luxuriant growth of the Japanese vine, Ampelopsis Veitchii, sometimes called the Boston ivy, imported from England by Mr. Robert M. Pratt, perhaps its earliest introduction into this city. After having been for years one of the most attractive sights in Beacon Street, it was partly winter-killed, and reluctantly removed.

Certain public events and celebrations have brought many notable personages to Boston from time to time, to whom the hospitalities of the Club have been extended, including several Presidents of the United States, members
